This is a nice balance between solving the problem at hand, giving the user some choice in terms of car how much data is important to them, and maximizing engagement. I'm wondering how the data is structured, are we looking at: \- Registration times \- Records of phone calls \- Closest ridesharing vehicles / cost \- Average time to completion \- Determinate happiness/indifferent ~~~ kichuku As the 'happy dev' I will try and answer your questions one by one. 1\. Registration times. The times are saved and based on the GPS data collected from the user's phone. 2\. Records of phone calls. No, there's no usage of this information. We don't want to collect the conversation transcripts. 3\. Closest ridesharing vehicles / cost. There are multiple factors that the riders take into consideration, including the average distance from rider to driver, average cost etc. 4\. Average time to completion. The average for an individual rider is only measured after the fact, so over time riders are able to compare their completion times. We also plan to factor in how many vehicles are involved in the transportation of a rider so that riders can compare ridesharing experiences. 5\. Determinate happiness / indifferent. On initial testing we have had mixed results, so we have a lot of data to look at before we can provide a good answer. Hope this helps! ----- foolsgold Does this strip out the time? ----- umutisik Facebook is the future. @value normalize-url from './normalize-url'; $global-font-family: "Open Sans", -apple-system, BlinkMacSystemFont, "Segoe UI", Roboto, "Helvetica Neue", Arial, sans-serif; $global-font-size: 16px; ba244e880a
