Is there any way to get the entire HTML page and not just the body? A: Take a look at the docs - (void)webViewDidFinishLoad:(UIWebView *)webView There's also a shorter version of that function: - (void)webViewDidFinishLoad:(UIWebView *)webView A: I agree with the comments above and here is my conclusion. If the web view is not visible, when it gets its content it will not show you the entire page. But if you are trying to do some screen scraping, it might be the right thing to do. If you are doing it in code, this may be a viable option. If you use UIWebViewDelegate, you can listen for webViewDidFinishLoad: and extract the information from the web view then post your information. Q: What is the best database solution for a website that will have little to no updates? I'm trying to decide on the best solution for a database that will be used to hold data used in a website with an SQL Server backend and a .Net 4.0 website hosted on IIS. I'm using MySql 4.0 with Entity Framework, but would like to see how others solve this problem. A typical user's session would be limited to a couple of days. The data will be sent through an AJAX call, and the server-side call would be a single query to get all of the data 2d92ce491b
